A new episode of the Teachers of Europe podcast on teacher well-being is available! This episode explores the challenges teachers face and how these affect their mental and emotional health, and the proactive measures that can be taken to support teachers' well-being. The new episode is available on EU Academy, Spotify, Google podcasts and Apple podcasts, together with the previous ones on refugee education and use of artificial intelligence tools.

In focus

Language teaching: boosting teachers' competence

Language teaching is in constant evolution, and we need to be aware of the trends and challenges affecting teachers and learners. One growing trend is developing language awareness in schools, which helps to frame multilingualism as an asset that supports, for example, citizenship skills, inclusion and creativity.

Mobility activities abroad are an important source of professional development for language teachers. Also, knowing how to apply digital tools can help making language lessons more engaging. Even professionals working in early childhood education and care need new skills to address and support multilingualism.

More on these and other topics (e.g. learning a second foreign language) can be read in the recent Eurydice report on language teaching in Europe. For food for thought on artificial intelligence in language education, watch the webinar recording and browse these course materials.
